I object to the brooklands farm development.

More houses mean more people.

More people means longer waiting times for appointments for dentist and doctors. The wait time is already months and it will just increase making the healthcare in Whitstable harder to access for people who seriously need it.

Schools will become over crowded causing there to be a higher need of employment for teachers or expansions of schools.

The loss of trees and plants means less oxygen produced making the percentage of CO2 in the air higher. This will eventually increase the rate of global warming, impacting other places of the world. There are many new housing estates so why not use some of the land for more important building such as a medical centre or a school.

Whitstable used to be full of greenery now it's becoming a concrete jungle.

Please, save our farmland.
