I certainly object to the possible filling in at Brooklands farm with houses and all the rubbish that goes with it i.e. sewage (unless they build their own plant) more cars to jam up whitstable on a sunny day. The roads can not cope as they are now and they are not being repaired. What with the thought of the other side of the old Thanet way , opposite Whitstable heights being filled in, who are buying theses houses, they can not be for first time local buyers as the developer would not make enough profit, so who are these people coming to an already saturated town, a London Borough buying plots to dump their housing on us like they did at the Barracks in Canterbury or is it so the council can collect more council tax and waste it . No, I strongly object.. A person who has lived here for 69 years.
