Dear Sirs

The Kentish Stour is much valued for its chalk stream status in its middle section. It is well known that the majority of chalk streams in the world occur in southern England. This river has been abused by human interference; this includes abstraction, pollution, and interference from man made obstructions.

The scheme at Chartham Mill provides an opportunity to achieve much needed improvements to the river. There are opportunities via the planning process to obtain significant developer contributions to river improvement. In particular barrier removal restores nature's ability to heal itself.

Yours faithfully
Richard Jones
